A Wonderful Cattle Pen.

Indian tradition as well as white lore tells that seventy-five miles northwest of Meeker, Col., is the most wonderful cattle ranch in the world. Within a space of five miles in length and a balf-mile in width roam a herd upon whose sides the branding ign has never been placed, and around whose hornes the lariat has never tightened.

But a score or even fewer of them have ever seen a man or horse or other animal of their kind, and, in truth, their, kin except at a distance of nearly 600 feet high above them. The Unte Indians call them "p chek-up" or red buffalo. And yet if an Indian who had seen them should be asked about it he would laugh and shake his head, and all the information obta nable would be. 'P'chek-up; 'em red, no ketch 'em.' There are more than 6:0 of this heard, and vet no man owns them; nor is there any man, white or black or copper colored, who has ever been able to possess a hoof of these fat and tempting beeves.

The cattle are in a prison. Out of it there is one method of escape, but to travel that road means death to the adventurous one. There is no way to get in except it be by use of a rope a thousand feet in length. As the Indians say, 'Heap see 'em; no ketchum, no come away.' On the two sides of the oblong space in which these cattle roam, rise precipitous and even coneaved rocks of 500 and 600 feet. either end seethes and rushes the Yampa or Bear R ver.

For miles above and for miles below it plunges on in its headlong haste to reach the arms of its parent, the scarcely less tumultuous but deeper Green R ver. Like the wonderful flattop mountains of Colorado, this home of the imprisoned heard has no likeness in the world. It recalls, in its inaccessibility the marvelous stories of the valley of verdure into which Mayne Reid's adventurers only found their way by the assistence of the bulloon. The story of the way in which these eattle came there is as strange as their existence is curious. Fifteen years ago, when the government troops were pursuing the Mormon murderers of the innocent victims of the Mountain Meadows Massacre, the Canites, or avenging Angels of the Mormons; fled into what was then literally the wilderness, A few of those who had been the blindest followers of Lee, the Mormon fiend incarnate, whose hands were red with the blood of women and children, found in their wandering a pretty valev on a stream which flows from Wasnich range into the Green River. They stuck their stakes, built their emptires and during the night the r sagacious leader had a vision which told them where to stay. They could scarcely have chosen in all Utah a more fert le or more isolated spot. They called it Ashley, and about them have since gathered more of their sect, until where the refugees posted the pleket of the first summer has grown a thriving village.

It is 140 miles from the Union Pacific Radroad south and 145 m les north of the Rio Grande Western. Until within five years it has been isolated entirely but now it is thirty-five miles from the Utah Reservation, and furnishing supplies for the agency forms quite a business for the community,

It is a tenet of the Dan tes that robbing or theft from a Gentile is no crime. So it was thought to be only a cunning trick when Joe to fire their new rifles, and had to ask Weeliffs one of the Mormon settlers for instructions on that subject. In the of the new town, and his three sons in Weeming, and carried away 800 covered the loss of the stock a few days after the were gone and started in

The Wyeliffes had their friends along the trail, and were warned by signals of the gang of the pursuing party. Acerlingly they drove the cattle as fast as they could travel oneastward, across Green R ver and up along the Bear, with the intention of reaching the Elk Mountain country in Northwestern Colorado where they would be practically safe from detection, and their stock, also could secure the most succulent of fund.

The thieves and the stolen herd had reached a mesa of inviting grass at sundown o e day and halted to camp for the night. A terrible storm arose, The four men desperately held the terror-stricken cattle by riding around them constantly. But the wild fear-fulness of the furious storm excited the brutes beyond measure. All at once, as if by one wild impulse, they stam-peded. A stampede of cattle by day is alculated to strike terror to any heart lest there be some human being in the pathway. A stampede by night is one of the most appalling spectacles. John ther and their horses were swept on and driven in the terror to escape the charge of the maddened an mals, over the brok of the awful precipice which frowns up from the waters of the Bear. After them planged the whole frightenherd, and down to the bottom of the fearful fall went horses and riders and horned creatures. Out of this plunge, to what was seemingly certain death for all, a few of the herd were not killed. Those which had gone ahead formed a cushion of death. Maimed, stunned but still invested with a spark of life, when the storm was over the living cattle formed the nucleus for the berd which now roams at will within their rocky confines. On the bank of the river, stretching back a few hu dred yards, grow succulent grasses, and upon this the cattle have propagated and thrived. In looking over the precipice, one can see that they are small and as wild and agile as deer. They have been shot so as to see the effect, and have learned to regard the appearance of a man, whether Indian or white, as a menace from which they flee, clambering over rocks and through underbrush to a marked by a pyramid of bones, which rises to the height of twenty feet. The ghastly reminders, relies of the human and animal victims of the terrible lesp sh ne forth white and glisten ug. The progeny of the sary ving animals from the fall are fat and sleek, though, and have their sunny beds, deer I ke, where they lie for warmth in the winter. There is no fierce mounta't I on or more dangerous bear, nor, in fact, any other animate thing within this cow garden of Eden. As yet, too, no man has been able to reach or disturb them. -Philadelph a Times.

KNEW HIS STEAMER.

The Bemarkable Intelligence of a Beautiful Yankee Dog.

Among the early arrivals this season, writes a Block Island correspondent of the Providence Journal was a large black dog named Rover, the property of Bishop Brothers, of New London. He came on the steamer Block Island and liked the trip so will that the next day he ran away and came on his own responsibility. Temptation increased with indulgence, and since then he has not mosed a trip. When the boat touched the wharf here he would jump off, always being the first to land, and would make a rapid tour of the immediate vicinity and exchange New Lendon for Block Island news with all the dog gossips he met, when he would harry back to the bout, usually getting on board about the time the last of the passengers had landed. On a recent trip, however, he did not get back until the stemmer was fully two hundred foot awa . seemed to comprehend the situation and did not waste any strength in barking, but stood on the very edge of the warf, gazing wistfully at the retreating yessel until she disappeared around Clay Head. He then climbed the bank, and after looking at the hotels before him went straight to Ocean View, where the porter explained his presence. The daughter and daughter-in-law of the proprietor took pity on him, and for twenty-four hours he fared like a prince, sleeping in the private office. The next morning, when the steamer Danielson blow her whistle, he hurried down, but saw it was not his boat, and did not try to go on board. Later, when the Mount Hope came, he was on her deck before the gang plank was out. A hasty inmistake and he went ashore. When the Block Island came, a half-hour later, his delight could not be restrained and he was not satisfied until he had seen every officer and man belonging to the steamer.

Even Afraid to Trust Their Soldiers.

The French value the secret of their new magazine rifle-the Lebel-so much that the troops have been ordered not to use it when mounting guard or taking part in mancouvers. For these purposes their old breech-loaders of the 1874 type are to be employed. This plan may or may not prove effectual in preventing the Germans from learning the mystery of the Lebel powder, which explodes noisclessly, and without producing any smoke, but it must have a perilous tendency to bring about a repetlon of the state of things which hindered the French from realizing the full super ority of the Chassepot during their last war with Germany. At the commencement of that war thousands of the French troops did not even know how present case the danger is accentuated the issue of a new regulation for- of bidding men to take into account mo is a lead of cattle ranging there. This was in 1876. The owners of the cattle disbattle. This is of course, on account of the new smokeless rifle. The position of a party on the defensive, hitherto betrayed by a cloud of smoke, will henceforth remain undisclosed to the assailants, and the practice of forcing the enemy to deploy by a fire from a great distance will have to be abandoned. The more the attacking party marches in servied ranks and the quicker it advances upon the onemy, the more fearful will be the losses inflicted upon it by the invisible foc. These are very momentous changes, amounting, in fact, to a revolution in the modern art of war. But the plan of making French soldiers carry their old rifles while the go through movements appropriate only to the new arm can only lead to confusion. - London Court Journal.
